Welcome / opening scene	Admiral of the Fleet: Lady's Voice (aboard the Salus enroute to 19 Fortuna)	Welcome aboard the Salus, commander; we have a publicity problem. Our miners are trapped on 19 Fortuna, a G-Type asteroid in the main belt, rich in tholin deposits. Communication is all but lost; however a comms team on the asteroid is reporting sporadic rock quakes and subterranean anomalies and requesting immediate evacuation. As you know, our standard company policy is to let fate play its hand... an evac would be far too expensive. Unfortunately, the media has gotten wind of the situation and the whole thing is about to become a public poop party — some temp in marketing. Anyway, the Salus is enroute to 19 Fortuna to save the tholin. The Salus will maintain a polar orbit over the asteroid. Get in, grab the tholin, get out. Oh and if possible, bring back a miner or two — you know, to dangle before the press for PR value. Good luck commander.
Landed on asteroid	Captain of the Salus: Man's Voice (first landing on 19 Fortuna)	Commander? Are you getting this? You're showing comms five-by-five. Gravitational readings are 0.0629 m/s ² . Vector thrust ramped up to 9.8m/s ² . You should now be able to move around like on Earth. Check your ion-drill (RHB). Check your decoy hologram (LHB). Launch your mapping drone (MMB). Good! You're all set. Orbital scans showing miners beneath tholin rocks and crystals. Go get em'.
An unstable asteroid	Captain of the Salus: Man's Voice (first drilling attempt and shaking ground)	Are you all right? Seems this asteroid's more unstable than our scanners revealed. Wait... I'm picking up something in the debris. But it's... impossible. We're getting anomalous readings of... movement. What the hell? Stay sharp commander. Your mech has no weapons so feel free to use some of those tholin crystals to power up your drill's EMP.
Asking for energy boost	Captain of the Salus: Man's Voice (mech requesting speed boost)	Deploying ion energy feed
Running back to the ship	Captain of the Salus: Man's Voice (mech rushing back to egress point)	The asteroid's breaking up. Move it commander! We will leave with you.
